SYNOPSIS:

"On Terror's Trail"

EPISODE NO. 5

Nan and Driscoll, barricaded in a cabin of the bandits stronghold, are about to give up hope as Gaspard comes to their rescue, and the three start off for home. Hays sees them leaving, but fearing that Gaspard may have discovered the secret of titano, dares not fire upon them, and instead sends Vane and Celeste to capture them alive.

Gaspard now confides to Nan and Driscoll that he has actually discovered the secret formula of titano, and displays the two vials in which it is contained. Driscoll suggests that they had better separate, so that the three will have to be captured to obtain the formula. This is agreed upon, and Nan and Gaspard, with one of the bottles, proceed on in one direction, while Driscoll, with the second vial, goes another way.

Driscoll is seen by Vane, Celeste and the several bandits accompanying them and is captured. The vial is taken from him, and then, handcuffed and blindfolded, he is allowed to go, Vane and Celeste feeling that he is certain to meet death under these handicaps in such a strange region of terrifying phenomena. Igloo, the Indian witch doctor, tries to free Driscoll from his bonds, but Driscoll, not knowing who the man is, flees blindly from him.

Hays and others of the bandits now see Nan and Gaspard. As Nan has the other vial of titano, Gaspard forces her to go on ahead while he endeavors to throw the bandits off the trail. But Hays captures him, tortures him, but is unable to obtain information from him as to where Nan has gone.

Nan, fleeing, encounters a stampede of buffalo and is forced to turn back. Hays sees her, and with some of his men, surrounds the patch of shrubbery into which he has seen her hide.

Vane and Celeste, now by themselves, are proceeding along as Vane thrusts his foot into a bear trap. Their plight is further increased as they see the stampede of buffalo bearing down upon them.

While Nan, crouched in the shrubbery, looks up and sees the blindfolded Driscoll on the very edge of a high cliff, just as a stick of dynamite thrown in the shrubbery by Hays explodes with a terrific report.
